EDITORIAL

The Maha-subhāṣita-saṁgraha, Volume IV, is being issued by the V. V. R. Institute, as No. 73 of its Vishveshvaranand Indological Series. It is a matter of gratification for this Institute that the earlier three volumes of the work had been received warmly both by the Sanskrit scholars and by the general reading public, as attested by the reviews of the said volumes published in prominent periodicals and the approbatory correspondence on these volumes received in this Office. The present volume takes off from where the third volume had ended and records 2000 verses, numbered 6286 to 8264, beginning with the Devanāgarī letters "उ" to "औ", including 21 extra verses.

The pattern adopted in the previous volumes has been followed in the present volume too. The wise sayings and entertaining verses, as culled from a wide variety of texts, including those of Indian origin preserved in the 'Greater Indian' literatures, such as those of Tibet, Ceylon, Indonesia, Cambodia and other countries, have been carefully edited and presented in Devanāgarī characters, with the indication of their primary, secondary and 'Greater Indian' sources. This is followed by the variant readings found in the different sources. A readable translation of the Sanskrit text into English follows, enabling the non-Sanskritist reader to grasp the innate wisdom and poetic charm contained in the verses. Short notes, in the form of footnotes, are added, wherever necessary, to explain contexts, indicate the persons referred to and point out allusions. Three indexes have also been compiled for the volume, being : I. Index of Authors and Sources, wherein brief details of the individual authors and also of the works are given, with the enumeration of the verses under their sources ; II. Index of Sanskrit Metres, wherein the verses couched in the same metre, other than Anuṣṭubh, have been collected and enumerated ; and, III. Subject Index, in which the innumerable topics dealt with or referred to in the verses have been indentified and indexed alphabetically, with cross-references wherever needed. It is to be hoped that this Volume will receive from its cultured readers the same approbation as was accorded to the earlier volumes.

The painstaking labour that Dr. Ludwik Sternbach has put in towards the preparation of this volume is better visualised than stated. Our Institute is highly indebted to Dr. Sternbach for compiling this Volume for publication by the Institute. While the present writer has had the privilege of editing the Volume intensively, revising entries as needed, supplying short notes and fresh translations wherever necessary, checking references and variant readings, and seeing the publication through the press, he had always at hand the unstinted co-operation of Dr. K. V. Sarma, Director-Professor of the sister institution, the Vishveshvaranand Vishva Bandhu Institute of Sanskrit and Indological Studies. Thanks are, again, due to Dr. Sarma for the help he rendered towards the compilation of the Subject Index.

We are also grateful to the authorities of the Akhila Bharatiya Sanskrit Parishad, Lucknow for arranging to release the Volume at a function soon to be held in honour of the author Dr. Sternbach to felicitate him on his completing 70 years of successful existence. Our Institute heartily felicitates Dr. Sternbach over his achievements and feels happy to offer this bouquet of poetic effusions to him on this memorable occasion, with the words :

उक्तं च वक्ष्यमाणं च  भर्त्सनं  तिर्यगीक्षणम् ।
क्वचिद् यथार्थकथनं  व्याख्या तन्त्रस्य षड् विधाः ॥

(आ) JS 51. 10.

(d) व्याख्यातन्त्रस्य JS ; (Suggestion : व्याख्या तन्त्रस्य); षड्विधाः JS ; (Suggestion : षड् विधाः).

Claiming that it has already been said, saying that it would be explained, threatening remark, looking away, speaking the truth at times, and offering explanation—these are the six methods of carrying one's point (in a debate). (S. Bhaskaran Nair's translation).

6287*

(अ) Janśṛṅg 81.

Śārdūlavikrīḍita metre.

Never have I spoken a harsh word which may give pain, oh! charming one, even during jokes; even in your absence no other girl was caressed by me even in words; I honour you alone adorned with a wealth of faultless merits; Oh! dear who get angry for no cause, tell me why you are angry with me. (A. A. R.).

6288

उक्तं परस्यामिषताम्  अनुक्तं यात्यदृश्यताम् ।

(आ) JS 61. 4 (a. Kṣemendra), SH 955; 148* (a. Kṣemendra).

(ab) तां मनुक्तं (sic!) SH (955).

The wealth of the rich, if spoken about, is like a bait for a stranger; if not spoken about, then it becomes imperceptible; and in case of death, it becomes a thorn in the heart.

(आ) Pad 59. 42 (a. Bhānukara), RJ 1153 (a. Bhānukara), SuSS 751 (a. Bhānukara).

Śārdūlavikrīḍita metre.

The words of helplessness that I uttered, the profusion in wealth that I expended, the painful days that I endured when separated from her, the number of times that I despatched the female messenger, the joining of my palms [salutation] to conciliate her when her eyes were filled with tears—all these, oh! friend, were forgotten when I kissed the sprout-like lip of the gazelle-eyed one. (A. A. R.).

Śārdūlavikrīḍita metre.

When spoken to she moves away, feeling shy she stops (speaking), glances slightly in a loving manner, pulls and fondles her tresses, yawns, begins snatches of songs, embraces another girl, speaks and kisses a small boy noisily, contracts her body in a wavy manner, yawns, laughs, expects him to be giving replies.

She may exhibit the root of her arms [bosom], caresses the dress on her bosom, may draw lines on the ground with her toe, smiling she may exhibit shyness for no reason, bite her sprout-like lip and speak in that attitude—with the exhibition of her feelings clearly in these ways the desire of deer-eyed damsels can always be understood. (A. A. R.).

Vasantatilakā metre.

When I ask you, you reply that you have not had any love-enjoyments during the previous night, oh ! dear with a charming gait, whether out of a desire to deceive me or out of shyness; but the upper garment of your loving husband clearly informs me, as it bears (the tell-tale) imprints of betel-juice, collyrium and the decorative paints of your bosom. (आ) Vidy 556.

Mandākrāntā metre.

There is no other talk going on (except on Śrī-Kṛṣṇa), no other thought surely exists in their minds, the eyes see no one else, nor does the ear listen (to anything else); in the paths we only see the dark form (of Kṛṣṇa); such is our mode of life in the Vṛndāvana; which women thus acquainted with it for a long time do not lead a happy and full life there? (A. A. R.).

(अ) PdP 5. 18. 392-3.

Where, by speakiug a falsehood, there is the saving of the lives of creatures, that lie should be deemed as truth; and speaking the truth (resulting in death) is uttering a lie.

Towards loving women, during marriages, in getting cows released from captivity and danger, during the times when calamities befall Brāhmaṇa-s, no sin is attached to persons by false swearings. (A. A. R.).

Śārdūlavikrīḍita metre.

She crosses the sea full of terrifying crocodiles, wandering in the sky devoid of any supporting columns, climbs up the impassable summits of mountains, scatters and spreads herself in the nether regions filled with poisonous serpents, all alone; oh! king, handsome in the eyes of all, your fame (thus spreads). Methinks, false is (the popular belief) that women are afraid to move out alone. (A. A. R.).

Sragdharā metre.

With their limbs swinging to and fro by the effect of the sharp goad plunged into their foreheads by the mahouts, and with the elephants of the quarters frightened to fight with them as they swing their frightening trunks with a deafening noise, and striking at the mountains with their massive legs encircled by chains on seeing them, the rutting elephants of the king having conquered all the directions found no battlefield for a fight anywhere. (A. A. R.).

It is said that four-fold is the look : radiant, straightforward, oblique and reddish; it is different, depending on circumstances.

It is radiant when meeting a friend; it is straightforward when looking at one's (own) son; it is oblique in love-making with a girl; it is reddish when the foe appears.

Why is that the learned are content to live in places other than the holy Kāśī in whose gardens the subsistence on various kinds of fruits will serve as the hardest penance; where the wearing of a small piece of cloth over the privoties is considered as a suit of fine garments; where the act of asking alms from door to door is thought as an honest and respectable calling; and where the approach of death is heartily awaited like that of a good and auspicious event. (P. G. Nath's translation).

With what aguish of heart do those wayfarers pass these weary vernal days, far away from their beloved ones! The shrill notes of the kokila-s, esconced among the leafy niches of the cūta-trees, whose clusters of myriad blossoms wave gently in the breeze, weighed down by the swarms of rapacious bees that hum around them, drawn thereto by the honeyed aroma—these warblings of the kokila-s sear the ears of those pining lovers and raise their anguish to fever pitch. And, separated from their dear ones as they are, these love-lorn wayfarers sink languidly into a reminiscent mood wherein, like yogins, they contemplate deeply and tenderly on these delights that erstwhile they culled during their past dalliances with their mistresses, dearer far to them than their very lives. Āryā metre.

The wealth of the persons who shrink from its enjoyment and are bent upon gathering riches remains at their house, like one's own daughter, just for another's sake. (J. Shastri's translation).

उपभोगादृते तस्य नाश एव न विद्यते ।
प्राक्तनं बन्धनं कर्म कोऽन्यथा कर्तुमर्हति ॥

(अ) PdP, Bhūmikhaṇḍa 81. 48.

Except undergoing its full course (good or bad), there is no other way of its coming to an end; such is the bondage of the fruit of previous actions : who is capable of changing its nature ? (A. A. R.).

7101

उपभोगाय च धनं जीवितं येन रक्षितम् ।
न रक्षिता तु भूर्येन किं तस्य धनजीवितैः ॥

(अ) Śukranīti 1. 180.

Wealth is for enjoyment, it saves one's life; if a king [or : person] does not protect the land, of what use is his life or wealth ? (A. A. R.).

7102

उपभोगेन पुण्यानां प्राक्तनानां तथांहसाम् ।
कर्तव्यमिति नित्यानाम् अकामकरणात् तथा ॥

(आ) ŚP 4422.

One has to enjoy the fruits of one's good deeds as well as those of sinful ones done previously. One should therefore do only those actions which are compulsorily enjoined on one and avoid those which are left to one's option (thereby one will avoid all troubles in future). (A. A. R.).

The daughter of desire[1] should strive to have the following lovers in their turn, as being mutually restful to her : a rich man's only son, a boy who has been loosed too soon from the authority and counsel of his father, an author enjoying office with a rather simple-minded prince, a merchant's son whose pride is in rivalling other lovers, the regular doctor of some chronically ailing official, the son of a celebrated master, an ascetic who is the slave of love in secret, a king's son whose follies are boundless and who has a taste for rascals, the countrified son of some village Brāhmaṇa, a married woman's lover, a singer who has just pocketed a very large sum of money, the master of a caravan but recently come in, a rich man with a taste for philosophy, a fool who treads in the footsteps of the first comer, a wise man drunk with knowledge, and an inveterate drinker. This well-decorated place where four roads meet is all quiet ; the laudatory verses (usually) sung by bards are not heard, the pleasing sound of drums are silent and sounds of music are completely absent ; the study of sacred texts is suspended, the competitive composition of poems by poets is absent ; so also are discussions and debates by learned scholars—how is it that this city remains in a vow of silence ? The decision unanimously arrived at by the ministers in consonance with the laws of dharma is deemed to be "the very best".

The decision unanimously arrived at by the ministers but with great difficulty and after a heated controversy falls under the category of "second class".

The decision where there is no unanimity of opinion among the councillors even after a stormy debate and which is not conducive to the prosperity of the state, is "the worst" that can be imagined. (T. S. Raghavacharya's translation).

A girl in love sucks at her lips, her eyes stray about like fish in a river-pool, she wears flowers in her hair, binds it up and then lets it down again; her breasts show through her clothes, her buttocks likewise—her girdle keeps slipping however tightly she ties it. All these things serve in a woman to make known that she is in love.

If she longs for a man as often as his face, his good looks, his conversation, his virtues and his affection are praised; and if, when he is not present, she delights in hearing news of his acquaintances and his friends—this too is a sign that she is in love. (A. Comfort's translation).

PREFACE

Volume V of the Mahāsubhāṣita-Saṁgraha is being issued under the most painful circumstances. Dr. Ludwik Sternbach, the author of the Volume, passed away suddenly on March 25, 1981, when the printing of the Volume was yet to commence. May be that he was not in the best of health, but he seemed to have a premonition of what was to come. For, he wrote in his letter from Turin, dated 28. 12. 1980, addressed to Dr. K. V. Sarma, who was to vet and edit the Volume : "The last wish of mine is that Vol. V of the Mahāsubhāṣita-Saṁgraha appears for the V World Sanskrit Conference in Varanasi and that you work on it with full speed. I beg you to do it." He added in the same letter, "I do hope that I shall be able to return to Paris, but I doubt that I shall survive the operation to be undertaken, probably some time in the second half of January. So, reply to me as soon as possible." He said further, "I have also made arrangements that my fortune (with the exception of other bequeaths to my family and friends which I have made) be given, after my death, to the "Dr. L. Sternbach Foundation" to be administered by the Vishveshvaranand Vedic Research Institute in Hoshiarpur for the continuation of the Mahāsubhāṣita-Saṁgraha," being the fulfilment of a pious promise which he had made to the Institute, as early as in 1973, while persuading the Institute to accept his Mahāsubhāṣita-Saṁgraha, for publication.

True to its academic tradition, the Institute immediately wrote to Dr. Sternbach a most reassuring and comforting reply wishing him full recovery and stating that the Institute would undertake the responsibility of continuing his great work in the lines that he had set out and that he would have the satisfaction of seeing Vol. V of the work being issued on the occasion of the V World Sanskrit Conference. It is a matter of great grief that Dr. Sternbach is not alive to witness the publication of his work, though the V. V. R. Institute has seen to it that it was issued as he had desired.

The timely issuance of this Volume is due also to another fortituous circumstance. Dr. K. V. Sarma whose scholarly advice was available to the undersigned in vetting and editing the previous four volumes of the work to the entire satisfaction of Dr. Sternbach, retired on 1. 1. 1980 as the Director-Professor of the University Wing of the Institute and the undersigned had to shoulder the responsibilities of that Wing, with the result that work on the Mahāsubhāṣita-Saṁgraha came to a standstill. In the meanwhile, Dr. Sarma had accepted the assignment as Academic Adviser to the well-known firm of Indological publishers, Ms. Motilal Banarsidass. Dr. Sternbach was, naturally, insistent upon his work being resumed and, in the changed circumstances, preferred Dr. Sarma to take up the editing of the work. Therefore, the Institute invited Dr. Sarma to rejoin it and it goes to the credit of Dr. Sarma that he paid heed to that invitation, gave up his lucrative job and assumed charge of Dr. Sternbach's work, as a labour of love, on account of his addiction to academic pursuits.

The present Volume of the Mahāsubhāṣita-Saṁgraha which is issued as No. 75 of the Vishveshvaranand Indological Series, records about 2000 wise sayings and entertaining verses in Sanskrit beginning with the Devanāgari letters क and का, numbered 8265 to 9979, with a number of additional verses inserted between the regularly numbered verses. The pattern of presentation is the same as in the previous volumes. The verses as extracted from the extant subhāṣita works and poems in Sanskrit and from texts of Indian origin preserved in Greater Indian literatures such as those of Tibet, Ceylon, Indonesia, Cambodia and other countries, have been carefully edited and presented with the documentation of their primary, secondary and Greater Indian sources. This is followed by the textual variants found in the different sources. A readable translation of the Sanskrit text into English follows, enabling the non-Sanskritist reader to grasp the innate wisdom and poetic charm of the verses. Footnotes are added wherever necessary to explain contexts, indicate references and point out allusions.

Three Indexes are appended to the Volume, being : I. Index of Authors and Sources, wherein brief details of the individual authors and also of works from which the verses have been extracted are given with the enumeration of the verses concerned ; II. Index of Sanskrit Metres, wherein the verses in the different metres, have been listed ; and, III. Subject Index, in which the innumerable topics dealt with or referred to in the verses have been identified and indexed alphabetically with cross-references. It is to be hoped that this Volume will receive from its cultured readers the same welcome as was accorded to the earlier volumes.

The painstaking labour which Dr. Sternbach has put in towards the compilation of this Volume is better visualised than stated. Dr. K. V. Sarma, with his characteristic enthusiasm and devotion to work, has edited the verses intensively, checking the entries and the references, vetting translations and adding notes, when required. He has also himself translated a large number of verses and has prepared the three Indexes to the Volume. The credit of the neat printing of the work in the course of a few months goes to the workers of the V. V. R. I. Press.

Before I close, I desire to mention that, in accordance with the wishes of Dr. Sternbach, this Institute has set up a Dr. Ludwik Sternbach Foundation with the primary object of continuing the compilation and publication of the 20-volume series of Mahāsubhāṣita-Saṁgraha, the completion of the unfinished writings of Dr. Sternbach and pursuance of editing and research in the realm of Indian anthological literature. We appeal to all lovers of Sanskrit and Indian culture and also scholars in general to help in the activities of this newly started Foundation. In fact, we would be thankful to our readers for any constructive suggestion or academic and other contribution that they could render in the above behalf and thus help us to fulfil the mission which savant Dr. Ludwik Sternbach stood for.

I may also direct the attention of our readers to a Note on the life and contribution of Dr. Sternbach which appears elsewhere in this Volume.

IN MEMORIAM

PROF. DR. LUDWIK STERNBACH

( 1909—1981 )

Perhaps next to the demise of its Founder-Director Acharya Dr. Vishva Bandhu in 1973 and of its benign President Diwan Anand Kumar in 1981, the V.V. Research Institute has sustained the most severe blow in the sudden demise of Dr. Ludwik Sternbach, a close associate, friend and benefactor of the Institute, on March 25, 1981. He passed away as the result of a heart attack as he was returning in a taxi after attending a meeting in Paris. He was a devoted researcher and an indefatigable worker. He bore a charming personality, affable, affectionate and disarming, qualities which his close friends and fellow-workers, including the present writer, can vouch for.

Dr. Sternbach's life and career were highly varied and eventful. He was born in Cracow (Poland) on Dec. 12, 1909 as the son of an eminent lawyer and studied law in the Jegellonian University at Cracow (1927-30). On passing out of the University, he worked in a judicial court (1931-32), then under a local lawyer (1932) and commenced independent practice as a Member of the Bar at Cracow in 1937. His interest in Indian culture and law prodded him to study Sanskrit, which he did under Prof. Mme. de Helena Willmann-Grabowska of the Department of Indian Philology, combining his studies with his profession. He took his LL.D. in 1933 and Ph.M. (Philosophy and Sanskritology) in 1936, his specialisation being Dharmaśāstra and Arthaśāstra. Since his Professor was the lone member of the staff of the Department, he volunteered to assist in giving lectures and looking after the Library (1933-37), when he was taken as a Reader in the Department (1937-38).

In the wake of the Nazi occupation of Western Poland and persecution of Jews, Dr. Sternbach escaped penniless (1939) to Lwow in Eastern Poland, then under Russian occupation. At Lwow he got an Assistant's job under Prof. Stefan Stasiak in the Institute of Indian Philology and Culture of the University of Jan Casimir (now Iwan Franko). When things began to hot up there, too, he left Lwow and reached India via Turkey and Iraq, suffering manifold difficulties on the way.

In India, the Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, Bombay gave asylum to this academic pilgrim and he was accepted as Professor of Dharmaśāstra and Indian Culture. In this capacity he became associated also with the Bombay University. The seven years (1940-46), which he spent in India, lecturing in the said two institutions, visiting other University centres, and associating with Indian scholars, was the most formative period in the academic career of the ardent aspirer after learning that Dr. Sternbach was. Thus, when the UNO was set up after the Second World War and Dr. Sternbach was drafted to it, in 1947, as Deputy Director of Research in the Department of Trusteeship on Non-Self-Governing Territories, he left India not only as a Dharmśāstra-vidvān, but also as a Loka-kathā-vidvān (Master of Indian folk-tales). Throughout his tenure in the above and senior capacities in the UNO at Paris, Geneva and New York, Dr. Sternbach continued, with zest, his Indianistic studies, which led him to still another allied field, viz., the rich subhāṣita literature in Sanskrit and developed into a Subhāṣita-vidvān too. His literary output and published writings during his tenure in the UNO from 1947 to 1970 is so prodigious that he seemed to have pursued his academic studies with as much interest and ardour as his official duties.

When his term of Office at the UNO came to a close in 1970, he joined the University of Sorbonne Nouvelle, Paris, as Professor of Indology, where he lectured on Indian Culture for two years (1970-72) and later in the same capacity in the Collège de France for four years (1972-76). During the last years of his life, he maintained close, though informal, connection with the said institutions and pursued his academic studies and publication activities unremittingly. Throughout his life, he suffered from poor health and impaired vision but that did not deter him from world travel, frequent visits to India and lecturing at Universities and Institutes in the countries that he visited.

While the subjects taken up for study by Dr. Sternbach were more of a general than of a technical nature, what was lost in depth was amply made up in expanse. Thus, the published writings of Dr. Sternbach is, to say the least, stupendous both in bulk and in variety. More than thirty titles, in about fifty volumes, some of them extending through a few hundred pages each, besides a hundred and fifty scholarly papers and over two hundred literary reviews is, indeed, an enviable record even for an assiduous academician. His early writings centered round the gnomic and didactic, and sociology, law and politics, in ancient India. While he presented through the 6-volume Cāṇakya-nīti-text-tradition (Hoshiarpur, 1963), and other similar text-editions, pithy Sanskrit texts prescribing the path of righteousness and avoidance of pitfalls in life, in his exegetical works like the 2-volume Juridical studies in ancient Indian law (1965, 1967), he correlated those texts with social customs and legal tradition of the land according to the Dharmaśāstras and Smṛtis. His Bibliography of Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra (Hoshiarpur, 1973) and Bibliography of Dharma and Artha in Ancient India (Wiesbaden, 1973) are very useful reference books on the subject.

From amongst his works on Sanskrit subhāṣita, three deserve special mention. First, his two substantial Supplements (Wiesbaden, 1965 ; Turin, 1974) to the well-known Indische Spruche by O. Boehtlingk. The second is his 2-volume Descriptive catalogue of poets quoted in Sanskrit anthologies and inscriptions (Wiesbaden, 1978, 1980), which forms the largest ever detailed documentation of about 2000 authors, many of them known only through their stray verses. The third is Mahāsubhāṣita-Saṁgraha, his magnum opus, a 20-volume "extensive collection of wise sayings and entertaining verses in Sanskrit, with Introduction, English translation, Critical notes and Indices." Four volumes of this work, each containing five to six hundred pages, had already been issued by the V.V. Research Institute, Hoshiarpur and further volumes were under preparation when the hands of death snatched away Dr. Sternbach in the midst of his work. Possibly, he had a premonition of his death, for he entrusted the continuation of the compilation and publication of this priceless project to the V. V. Research Institute, through a 'Dr. Ludwik Sternbach Foundation', which the Institute has since set up.

Dr. Sternbach was a member of several learned bodies and was the recepient of several honours, but what he cherished most were the honorary doctorates which the Sampuranand Sanskrit University, Varanasi and the Kameshwar Singh Sanskrit University, Darbhanga, conferred in him, both in 1980, mainly in consideration of his work on the Mahāsubhāṣita-Saṁgraha. It may be pertinent to name here some of the Indological research institutions in India with which Dr. Sternbach had the closest academic association, viz., V. V. R. Institute, Hoshiarpur, All-India Kashi Raj Trust, Varanasi, Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan, Bombay, the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona, and Akhila Bharatiya Sanskrit Parishad, Lucknow.

Soft-spoken, pursuasive and unbelievably courteous, this Senior Officer of the UNO who has achieved, in the literary field, perhaps, more than a well-placed academician, has left a void in Indological scholarship. Indeed, his numerous friends and admirers, both in India and in the West, will miss his benign presence in the sessions of the World Sanskrit Conference, of which he was the Secretary-General and the live force.

In the very height of love's scorching fever, she abhors, strangely enough, the cooling unctuous sandal, the cool rays of the moon and the cool breeze from the lotus pond wafting the scent from the neighbouring flowery thickets; her agony is indeed aggravated thousand-fold by these cooling medicaments. More strangely still, in the secret recesses of her heart, she fondly dotes on the cool delight that thy limbs alone can engender through soft caresses ; and thus nourishing herself with the feeble hope of clasping thy form again to her bosom, she clings, though for a moment only, fast to life. (S. Lakshminarasimha Śastri).

She is delicate as a lotus-bud, with the perfume of a full-blown blue-lotus ; in her body, rich in delights of love, is a divine fragrance ;[1] her eyes are like the eyes of a frightened gazelle, and crimson at the edges ; her faultless pair of breasts surpass the beauty of bilva-fruits.

(She is a padminī) whosoever has a nose like a sesame blossom, who constantly and devotedly pays honour to brāhmaṇas, her elders and the gods ; who has the loveliness of a water-lily petal and the brilliancy of a cāmpeya-flower ; whose form, like the sheath of a full-blown lotus, is as a parasol to save from the heat of desire.

She is a padminī who moves gently and gracefully like a slender royal swan ; whose waist is charming with the three folds ;[2] whose voice is like a swan's ; who is beautifully arrayed ; who eats daintily, gracefully, and cleanly ; who is jealous, and very bashful ; a charmer clad in garments like brilliant flowers. When a poet composes a poem depicting the story of the Lord, there is auspicious merit in it ; when he includes in some places verses depicting the sentiments of love, heroism, etc., what harm is there ? For, this practice is resorted to by those who compose and appreciate poetry. (Moreover) this practice is seen also in the works of honoured authors like Vyāsa and Vālmīki ('born of a hole in the earth'). (A. A. R).

What is the ornament for the strong ? 'Patience.' What is humiliation ? 'That done by one's own people.' What is distress ? 'Dependence on others.' Who is to be praised in this world ? 'He who is resorted to for assistance.' Which is death ? 'Vices.' Who give up grief ? 'Those who have vanquished their enemies.' Who knew this ? 'The Pāṇḍavas who remained in cognito in the Virāṭa capital (during their banishment).' (K. V. Sarma).

Betel stimulates love, sets off the countenance, ingratiates, gives fragrance to the mouth, is tonic, quells phlegmatic diseases and is productive of yet other advantages.

Used with a moderate dose of lime, it gives colour ; with too excessive a dose of areca-nut, it destroys colour ; with too much lime, it gives a bad smell to the mouth, but when the betel-leaf predominates, a pleasant smell.

At night a quid of betel is salutary, if it consists chiefly of leaf, and at day-time, if it is mixed with lime ; to apply betel in any other fashion than those here prescribed is a mere abuse of it. When the fragrance of betel is enhanced by kakkola, Areca, Averrhoa and Enythrine, it awakens the joys of amorous intoxication. (H. Kern).

Sragdharā metre.

Do not care (much) for love(-making), do not accept too much even of dharma, direct not your mind towards wealth, but resort to one fine art which gives ambrosial fruits — thus does Lord Śiva, the enemy of Cupid, riding the vṛṣa (bull), and penniless, give advice to all by adorning himself with a kalā [ digit ] of the nectar-rayed moon. May he give protection to you all. (A. A. R.),

One may, perhaps, paint the features and figure of the Sun (on a wall), but how will one put on the canvas the light which is beyond the support of any wall ? (A. A. R.).

Āryā metre.

Peaceful, the gentle deer untroubled gaze ; / all that they need, their forest-home supplies. / No greed for wealth nor envy clouds their days. But these are only beasts, and we are wise ! (J. Brough).

Vasantatilakā metre.

Your body is horripillated ; your eyes shed tears (of joy), your words are choked with emotion, friend ; and your bosom heaves. Ah, I understand, the sweetness of the music of the flute of Śrī Kṛṣṇa makes your mind, O moon-faced one, full of tremulousness. (A. A. R.).

Mandākrāntā metre.

May be that some words of the poets are unfruitful, but there are others which, on account of their describing the exploits of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, become veritable wish-granting cows ; , granted that wealth given to people not proficient in scripture is unfruitful, that given to worthy persons brings blessings to the liberal donors. (A. A. R.).

Vasantatilakā metre.

Looking closely into poison and indulgence in sensual pleasures, poison is indeed preferable to pampering the senses. Poison kills in the current birth, whereas sensual pleasures torment even in subsequent births. (A. A. R.).

Vasantatilakā metre.

That your glance restored to the wakeful state Cupid who was put to rest by Śiva is no praise bestowed on you, Divine mother ; on the other hand, it only becomes an inconsistent statement in as much as you are the sportive originator of all the four aims of human existence, (including Kāma).[1] (A. A. R.).
